Our Farms

Our hen coops are built to the world standards and equipped with modern technology.

Our hen coops are protected with high level bio safety measures.

We have a total of 42 farms distributed to 4 different locations.

From the age of zero, our chicks are fed 100% organic raw material feeds and never use drugs and antibiotics.

We realize that just like us humans, hens need lots of open space to roam around and exercise to be at their healthiest. So free walking areas are adapted to the well-being of our chickens with various plants and trees.

The data of 42 hen coops in separate locations are kept separately by our veterinarians every day and the traceability of each egg produced is provided.

This is an indication of how much confidence our consumers have in our product.

Free range Eggs

Free-range Eggs

Eggs labeled free-range were laid by hens that have access to the outdoors. This can simply mean the hens have an indoor space connected to an outdoor area—not that they are roaming around "free." In addition to eating grain these hens may forage for wild plants and insects.

Our Free Range eggs are laid by the happiest and healthiest hens around. We realise that just like us humans, hens need lots of open space to roam around and exercise to be at their healthiest.

Healthier hens mean more nutritious and better tasting eggs, so it's good for everyone. The yolks are a bright yellow and just bursting with yummy goodness.

Organic Egg Powder

Organic Egg Yolk Powder

Usage Areas

Egg yolks are known for their emulsifying properties, especially in mayonnaise, salad dressing and cream sauces, but they also have other culinary applications. For example, powdered egg yolks are also commonly used in bakery applications. Also in bakery products, lecithin in egg yolk reduces moisture loss and has a softening effect. When combined with other ingredients like cream or milk, bread, rolls and pocket-style form a perfect mystery to seal sandwiches. The glaze provides a shiny golden-brown surface, as well as preventing the drying and hardening of the bark in the pastry products.
